

Imagine a child had failed a test at school and was feeling really they received.

What do you think the child is thinking?

that they are stupid

They must be disappointed that they are a failure and they cant do anything right.

That they are a failure, they could have studied longer

The child is thinking that they are stupid or have disappointed their parents.

There were afraid and scared of what the parents were tolding that their parent would be upset

The child was feeling that they didn't do their best and probably felt like they're a failure

The child feels like they're being picked on or singled out, or maybe that they're not smart. It was unfair.

I wish I were smarter. I suck at this.

i think feeling upset and sad .

what did I not do right?

Scared

How much of a failure they are to themselves and knows their parent(s) will be disappointed. It's a big trouble.

They are probably having negative thoughts about their abilities; like they are too slow, he became sad and worried that their parent might be upset with them for failing

He is very upset

That they didn't do as well as they could, and maybe they aren't as good as they thought

They're thinking they can't do anything right and they might be stupid.

They are thinking that they are stupid. They feel embarrassed.

That this failed and are not smart and are not good at school.

The child will probably think that they are stupid or not smart enough to have passed the test. They are worried about their parents being angry with them and getting into trouble for their grade.

I think the child is thinking they are a failure and mad that they did such a bad job at the test. They are disappointed in themselves and the class for the outcome that they have had.

The child is probably thinking that he or she is stupid and not capable of getting good grades. It's not good

That he failed at a test and he is lacking something.

I believe that this child is probably feeling dumb and not smart. They probably feel like themselves.

don't feel

That they tried their best and it wasn't good enough.

The child is feeling like a failure and incompetent because of the grade they received.

Thinking he let his parents down

How am I going to tell my parents about this. How mad will they be when they find out how upset they might make his parent

its very chilly

That she or he performed poorly due to a lack of studying or not understanding the material failure and/or dumb/stupid.

That they recognize that they did not achieve their goal, and that they feel that they had

That they failed in their responsibility to perform well in school. They probably took a bad grade because grades are taught to be very important.

I'm stupid and my parents are going to kill me.

They probably feel disappointed in themselves

I imagine that the child would feel they aren't as smart as the other kids, and that they w

That they'll be punished

They think they are not smart enough. They think they are dumb.

That they should study harder for the next test.

I let myself down. I could have done better. I let my parents down, they will be upset w

Disappointed with themselves. They feeling dumb. They may not feel as smart as othe ashamed to tell their parents

They are thinking that they will make their parents disappointed.

I think the child is thinking that it is a failure. They think that they will be unable to rece future.

If the child fails a test and he thinks what he thinks, then he needs to get better at the ne

That they are a failure